JADE x J-TREE Joint Workshop @ GRIPS

1. Report of the workshop

See the attached program.

2. Comprehensive Report

The workshop drew substantial participation from students and early-career researchers from both groups, generating a dynamic atmosphere throughout the event. Thanks to the generous funding support from GRIPS, which provided travel grants for student participants, many graduate students were able to attend who might otherwise have found it difficult to participate. The presence of numerous international students and researchers was particularly noteworthy, with presentations and discussions conducted predominantly in English, lending the workshop a distinctly international character.

The presentations encompassed various themes that effectively bridged environmental and development economics. The common methodological approaches employed by both groups, such as econometric analysis and field experiments, facilitated engaging cross-disciplinary discussions and fostered meaningful academic exchange.

The coffee breaks between sessions proved to be valuable networking opportunities, with participants engaging in substantive research discussions that frequently extended beyond the allocated time. This observation suggests that longer breaks might have been beneficial for further academic exchange. Nevertheless, the workshop successfully achieved its primary objective of promoting collaboration between different research groups, establishing a solid foundation for future research partnerships.
